

The Big Miss: My Years Coaching Tiger Woods

When I first met Tiger Woods in 1993, he was a skinny 17-year-old with a golf swing that was all over the place. But there was something about him that I couldn't ignore. He had a fire in his eyes, and he was determined to be the best.

I started working with Tiger on a regular basis, and it wasn't long before I realized that he was a special talent. He had an incredible work ethic, and he was always willing to listen to my advice. But what really set Tiger apart from other players was his ability to focus. He could block out all the distractions and just concentrate on the shot at hand.

Tiger's progress was meteoric. In 1996, he became the youngest player to win the Masters Tournament. In 1997, he won the PGA Championship and the Players Championship. And in 1999, he won the U.S. Open, the British Open, and the PGA Championship, becoming the first player to ever win all four major championships in the same year.

Tiger's success continued for many years. He won a total of 14 major championships, and he was ranked number one in the world for over a decade. But in 2004, Tiger decided to leave me as his swing coach. I was disappointed, but I understood his reasons. He wanted to try something different.

In the years since Tiger left, I've often thought about our time together. I'm proud of the role I played in his success, and I'm grateful for the opportunity to have worked with such a great champion.

In this book, I tell the story of my years coaching Tiger Woods. I share my insights into his personality and work ethic, and I offer my own thoughts on what made him the greatest golfer of his generation.

I hope you enjoy reading this book as much as I enjoyed writing it.
